Photosynthesis converts light energy into chemical energy. The light reactions occur in the thylakoid membranes and produce ATP and NADPH. The Calvin cycle uses ATP and NADPH to fix carbon dioxide into glucose. Chlorophyll absorbs light that drives the light reactions. Glucose stores energy for the plant. Cellular respiration later releases that stored energy as ATP. Stomata regulate gas exchange for the Calvin cycle.